

OMAR BRADLEY

During his distinguished 38-year military career, Omar Nelson Bradley rose to the highest rank in the U.S. Army, had been its chief of staff and served two terms as the first chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. An athlete in high school, Bradley lettered in both baseball and football at West Point, and later commented on the importance of sports in teaching the art of group cooperation.

